Garibaldi took the title of Dictator in the name of Victor Emmanuel. King Francis, it is thought, should have taken the stronger course, defied Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi alike, and appealed to Austria. Actually he did the worst thing possible; he granted a Constitution and formed a ministry of liberals, wishing to conciliate both France and Great Britain. It is clear that Napoleon strongly disliked the union of South Italy to the already overgrown kingdom, as it seemed to him, of North Italy, and to pose as a Constitutionalist was to make a bid for French help. But twice already had a King of Naples granted a...
